

Steelworkers from Geneva may accept pay reduction

By WAYNE WATSON
Staff Writer

Local steelworkers may accept a 15- to 20-percent pay reduction when national union leaders begin their wage policy negotiations Feb. 15 in Pittsburgh, Pa., according to Jerry Hansen, vice-president of United Steelworkers Local 2701, representing workers at the Geneva Steel plant.

"Our existing three-year contract is good through July 31, but the union's been contacted by numerous steel producers to negotiate early this year," he said.

Hard times

"We realize hard times are upon us everywhere, we want to do our part," Hansen said. Hansen said the USW union can't afford to be rigid on wages if the American steel industry is to regain its strength.

Dennis Hollaway, president of USW Local 2701, said he will support legitimate reductions in wages steel producers will deliver aid for out-of-work steelworkers and provide pension safeguards for long-time union members who have been laid off.

"I'll support concessions because the steel industry is in trouble and my people are hurting," he said.

"We've got to help each other out so the industry can begin making a profit," he said.

"With the industry on a national level running at about 50 percent, the workers see a need to help," Hansen said.

"It's hard to say how much of a wage reduction an individual steelworker will receive," Hansen said. "We'll have to wait until after the negotiations begin the 15th of this month. If all goes well, the negotiations will be finished by the first of March."

Worst slump

The steel industry is in its worst slump in 50 years, and officials say they will accept a strike if their costs can't be reduced, according to news sources.

"Right now we're looking at affecting about 2,000 members of the local," he said. "That's about 55 percent of our peak work load of around 3,500 workers at Geneva Works."

More than 2,000 Geneva steelworkers are laid off, while those who are working are on reduced work schedules, according to Jack Bollow, spokesman for U.S. Steel's Geneva office.

Fireside speaker is Elder Durham

Elder G. Homer Durham of the presidency of the first Quorum of Seventy will speak Sunday at the 14-State Fireside.

The public is invited to attend the 7:30 p.m. fireside in the Marriott Center, according to Neal E. Lambert, president of the BYU 7th Stake, which is hosting the meeting.

Elder Durham is currently managing director of the Church History Department. He retired in 1976 after serving seven years as the first commissioner and chief executive officer of the Utah System of Higher Education.

From 1960 to 1969, he was president of Arizona State University. During his tenure, enrollment at ASU jumped from more than 10,000 to 26,000, and several professional programs were established.

He has been a consultant in public administration in several western states and various inter-state commissions and municipal associations. He is the author and editor of numerous books on public administration, government and taxation.

His church service includes a mission to England and as leadership positions in Arizona and Utah and on the Sunday School General Board.

Food shipments dwindle

Renewed assault on trucks

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bushwhackers who have attacked more than 500 trucks during a violent truckers strike renewed their assaults Thursday, and food brokers from St. Louis to Boston began feeling the pinch of shortages.

Shipments of fresh fruit and vegetables dwindled, shipping costs went up and officials warned consumers to be prepared to pay more at the checkout counter.

The truckers are trying to get a little more since they are out there ducking bullets now," said Bernie Kaster, a buyer at the Louisville Produce Terminal Association in Kentucky, where food distributors said they were paying up to 30 percent more for freight which was taking up to twice as long to arrive.

One reason was that many truckers were traveling only in the daytime and forming convoys for protection.

An explosion late Wednesday night rocked the Interstate Motor Freight Systems trucking terminal near Youngstown, Ohio, but there were no injuries. The FBI was investigating the blast and resulting fire that damaged the roof, buckled a wall and blew off several doors leading to the loading dock.

At least 232 trucks have been hit by gunfire and another 274 have been damaged by bricks, firebombs and other missiles or had their tires slashed since Monday when the Independent Truckers Association called the strike to protest scheduled hikes in gasoline taxes and highway fees.

One Teamsters union driver was shot to death in North Carolina and 30 other people have been injured, two seriously, in the violence that has spread to at least 32 states, mostly in the East. At least 13 people have been arrested.

In one of the sniping incidents, a truck carrying radioactive material was hit by gunfire Wednesday night 12 miles south of Clinton N.C., according to Walker Burch of Tristate Motor Transit Co. in Joplin, Mo.

Burch said the bullets did not penetrate the two containers holding the material, which he refused to identify.

While the nation's 100,000 independent truckers — drivers who own their own rigs — represent about one fifth of the trucking industry, they handle about 90 percent of the perishable produce shipments. That had some officials worried.

A spokesman for Florida Gov. Bob Graham said no trucks were being loaded Thursday at the Florida City Farmers Market, a major loading area in the vast vegetable fields of South Florida where the tomato and pole bean harvest is at its peak.

Driving accident damages duplex

Provo police survey damage done to a duplex hit by a vehicle when the driver failed to negotiate a curve. Estimated damage to the home and to a nearby cemetery fence is $15,000 to $20,000. The driver was charged with drunken driving and his passenger was arrested for public intoxication.

Baby trapped under debris

An errant driver early Thursday morning missed a curve, hit a cemetery fence and crashed into a duplex located at 725 E. 600 South in Provo at 12:15 a.m., Provo Police Chief Sven Nielsen said.

The driver, Jeffrey C. Carter, 24, 243 N. 200 West, Springville, was driving eastbound on 600 South and was approaching 700 East at the time of the accident, Nielsen said. He missed a curve and struck a fence surrounding Provo City Cemetery, destroying approximately 145 feet of it. After hitting the fence, Carter's vehicle crossed the street and hit a duplex while traveling five feet off the ground, Nielsen said.

A resident of the damaged duplex, Mrs. Joel M. Wright, said, "We were in bed when we heard a crash. The car struck our children's bedroom. The crash hurled our child's bed across the room."

Kevin West, occupant of the other side of the damaged duplex said his 8-month-old son, Bentley, was thrown 10 feet in the air across the room where he was sleeping and was trapped in the debris but not hurt.

A passenger in the vehicle, Steven J. Walsh, 31, of 349 N. 800 East, Springville, sustained facial lacerations. Carter also received facial lacerations.

Nielsen said Carter was jailed and charged with drunken driving and Walsh was arrested for public intoxication.

Nielsen said damages are estimated at $15,000 to $20,000.

Y Indians express shock

Watt's remarks draw fire

ELDER DURHAM

By DAN HARRIS
Staff Writer

Indians know they have problems, said Dr. Janice Clemmer of BYU's Indian Education Department in response to the remarks made recently by Interior Secretary James Watt.

"All Indians shouldn't be thrown in the same bag," Clemmer, a Wasco-Shawnee-Delaware Indian with two doctoral degrees, said. "Watt's remarks were very insensitive."

All families and organizations have problems, but to point a finger at them without a suggestion for improvement is useless, Clemmer said.

Watt is supposed to help Indians, but now he is only causing hurt, she added.

"Indian reservations are microcosms of society at large," she said. The problems must be looked at in the proper perspective. Only 50 percent of all Indians are living on reservations, Clemmer said.

Watt has stirred a lot of reaction from the statement he made on a TV talkshow, when he said, "If you want an example of the failures of socialism, don't go to Russia. Come to America and see the Indian reservations."

Clemmer said Watt was "not totally inaccurate, but definitely reckless. Everytime he grabs the spotlight he says something reckless." Watt seems to enjoy shocking people into doing things, he thrives on sensationalism, Clemmer said. "But maybe we need the shock."

Clemmer was raised on the reservation of the confederated tribes of Warm Springs, Ore. It is not the reservation that creates the problems of unemployment, divorce, alcoholism and drug usage, Clemmer said. People have these problems no matter where they live.

The relocation program of the 60s and 60s did not solve the problems, said Charles Harper from Roosevelt, Utah, a senior majoring in psychology. The Indian problems were just moved to the urban setting.

"It is a matter of individual choice, the opportunities are there (on the reservations) to improve one's situation," Clemmer said.

A good relationship comes from understanding, Watt doesn't have a good understanding of the Indian people. He only makes us resentful," said Jerry Yazzie, a Navajo Indian from New Mexico majoring in art.

"Watt is very naive about reservations," Harper said.

"I feel Watt was telling the truth, but he wasn't using tact," said Lee Bergen said. A Navajo from Tuba City, Ariz., majoring in psychology.

Bergen said he was unaffected by Watt's statements but said Watt really hurt the Indian leaders. "People that pass legislation don't understand," Bergen said.

Tylenol makes comeback, tries to regain public's trust

By NANCY BRINGHURST
Staff Writer

Nightmares don't usually have a good ending.

Marketing experts agree the nightmare involving seven Tylenol-related deaths in the Chicago area in October 82 was handled by officials of McNeil Consumer Products Co., which markets Tylenol for Johnson & Johnson, as one of the most successful public relation comebacks in history. Stephen E. Permut, a professor of marketing at Yale University, said principal managers of Johnson & Johnson, parent company of McNeil, should receive high marks for "clearly managing the crisis" and because they seemed to have taken every step correctly.

Locally, Herb McLean, director of corporate communications for Valtek in Springville, said, "This could have been a losing situation for McNeil, but they turned it around. It's one of the major public relation success stories of the century."

Greg Soter, owner of an advertising agency in Provo, said he thought the company generally seemed to do all the right things. "It must have, but a lot of money to destroy the product like they did, but it was a very responsible thing to do. I was impressed with the ads they ran to reassure the consumer that they would replace the Tylenol thrown away."

Tylenol sales annually are $450 million, bringing in about $80 million in profits for Johnson & Johnson. This accounts for nearly 17 percent of the company's earnings.

According to David E. Collins, chairman of McNeil, the decision to fight back by offering to replace Tylenol that frightened consumers might have thrown out was necessary. "It became clear to us that our most important job was to restore confidence in the brand," said Collins. "To do that, we had to get back into our customers' homes."

"We can't be sure yet how successful our coupon offer has been," said Ed Watson, a public relations consultant for McNeil, "but the product is moving very well." Watson said that initially employees for McNeil were shocked by the cyanide-related deaths involving Tylenol, but they immediately regrouped to help the product make a comeback.

Tylenol sales improve

"Our employees were tremendous. They volunteered their time to help handle the more than 400,000 phone calls we received on our toll-free number from concerned consumers," Watson said.

An intense media blitz was developed to help communicate Johnson & Johnson's concern over the crisis. "Within 24 hours we had a telegram telling us that the capsules had been withdrawn in the Chicago area, and within 48 hours we were informed they had been withdrawn from the total market area," said Douglas R. Forsyth, local sales representative for McNeil pharmaceutical products.

"We were asked to contact the physicians and health care professionals we deal with to explain the facts as soon as we got them," Forsyth said. "Even though I sell the prescription Tylenol products, I think there was a need to reassure our people that all Tylenol products were safe."

The response here in Utah was very good; people understood that Tylenol wasn't at fault. The company responded so quickly to the crisis — I'm sure it saved more lives by destroying all the capsules. It was important to me to see that it actually followed its own credo."

Quoting from the first line of the Johnson & Johnson credo it states, "We believe our first responsibility is to the doctors, nurses and patients, to mothers and all others who use our products and services..."

Local Tylenol sales representative Bob Kaelin said he was pleased to be a part of the program. "Locally, Tylenol could have been ruined," said Kaelin, "McNeil's total concern for the consumer is paying off."

"We hold about a 35 percent share of the analgesic market in our area (Utah and Idaho) which we are rapidly regaining," Kaelin said that he didn't really have to do any extra selling to get retailers to order the capsules again. "In fact, we have a greater demand for the capsules than we can fill."

Kaelin said he was informed daily after the crisis hit, and when the capsules were withdrawn, he made sure all his customers sent the product to McNeil headquarters. According to Ed Watson, the capsules were placed in a warehouse where a company retained for the purpose of destroying them did so in accordance to state and federal regulations.

The BYU Health Center got involved in an "advisory" capacity, according to Dr. Manfred R. Nelson, assistant director of health in the clinical medicine department.

"Students and parents called to ask us questions about Tylenol," said Nelson, "and we advised them about the product and how to look for tampering."

Penny Cepull, who buys pharmaceutical products for a pharmacy in Provo, said they pulled the capsules as soon as they heard the news over the radio. "McNeil notified us a couple of days later and included update information on our invoices," said Cepull. She indicated that people still asked for the product and that sales didn't noticeably go down.

An informal sample of BYU students, who were asked, were split in half over whether they would buy the capsules again. Blair Burton, who is from Cleveland, Ohio, with an undeclared major, said he definitely wouldn't buy the product. "There's something in your mind that says no — buy something else."

Jim Clements, a design and graphics technician major from Kelso, Wash., said "I don't buy pain relievers, but if I did, I wouldn't have any qualms about buying Tylenol."

One part-time student, a mother of three, indicated she was very cautious about buying any medicine now. Pam Clyde, an elementary education major from Orem, said "I'm too scared about Tylenol. I know it wasn't their fault, but still, I check everything I buy now for safety seals."

According to Bill Wade, senior vice-president of Skaggs-Alpha Beta, the new tamper resistant packaging is giving the consumer confidence in Tylenol. "We're concerned also that all similar products are developing the safety seals," said Wade. He said Tylenol capsules are in the process of returning to store shelves.

Because of the deaths related to drug tampering the Federal Drug Administration recently set a regulation for companies who manufacture over the counter drugs in capsule, liquid and gel form to have their products in tamper-resistant packaging by Feb. 7. Tablets must be similarly protected by May 5. William Grigg, director of public relations for the Food and Drug Administration, said there is also a bill in legislation that would make it a federal crime to tamper with drugs.

House delays death penalty bill

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A House committee Thursday deferred action on a bill that would force a mandatory death penalty on people convicted of kidnapping children.

In addition, the bill would require that signs stating "Kidnaping is punished by death in Utah" be posted at the state's border.

In other matters, the full House passed a bill that would commit Utah to an interstate compact to return runaway juveniles to their parents and also approved a bill designed to halt the theft of trees and firewood from state and national forests.

The kidnapping bill, sponsored by Rep. Frances Merrill, R-Salt Lake, was held after members of the House Social Services Committee said certain provisions would probably be ruled unconstitutional and would nullify existing laws against aggravated kidnapping.

Committee members also expressed fear the mandatory death penalty would encourage kidnappers to kill their victims to eliminate witnesses.

The committee recommended that the bill be revised before being sent to the floor for general debate.

The bill is one of several the legislature is considering to impose stricter penalties against criminals who make children their victims. It is the fourth bill to be aimed specifically at kidnapping and sexual abuse of children.

In its present form, the measure also would eliminate insanity as a possible defense in child kidnapping trials.

Merrill said the measure's harsh penalties were justified because rape and sexual abuse of children — which often is the fate of kidnapped children — are "worse than death."

"These children who are kidnapped or sexually abused, they never really become a part of society. They have a high rate of suicide," she said.

Under present state law, aggravated kidnapping is a capital offense, but courts are given the option of whether to impose the death penalty.

Rep. Richard Maxfield, R-Provo, said the bill was flawed because it attempted to impose a mandatory death sentence for crimes that do not involve a loss of life. An opinion from the attorney general's office, obtained by Merrill, points out that the U.S. Supreme Court has upheld the death penalty only in murder convictions.

"If you want the bill to show how you feel, we could pass it this way, but the first court we take it to, it will throw it out," said Maxfield, an attorney.

Merrill said she would welcome a constitutional challenge, should the bill become law, because it would provide a test for the Supreme Court's current rulings on capital punishment.

Rep. Shirli Fadel, R-Ogden, said the mandatory death penalty is needed to provide a deterrent.

"I believe if we give the death penalty and go through with it, I think they're going to think twice about kidnapping. What we want to do is stop it before it starts," he said. "People are afraid to let their children out, and the communities are really begging for something to keep our children safe."

The House passed 59-0 a Senate bill that would allow the state to enter an interstate compact to return child and teen runaways.

"This would be a powerful tool in the hands of parents to bring their children back," said Rep. Lorin Pace, R-Salt Lake, who sponsored the bill on the House floor.

The House voted 53-12 to pass another Senate bill which would prohibit the transport of forest products without proof of ownership. Rep. Ronald Stephens, D-Ogden, who sponsored the bill in the House, said 70,000 cords of wood and between 50,000 and 100,000 trees are removed illegally from Utah forests each year. He said the state also loses about 10,000 posts and 1 million to 2 million saw logs each year.

Loss of land still Indians' main fear

In the 1960s the termination policy was discarded, although never officially repudiated. In 1975 President Nixon signed into law the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, which is still in effect today.

In a statement released by the White House on Jan. 24, 1983, concerning Indian policy, Reagan said, "because the termination policy... has not been expressly and formally repudiated by a concurrent resolution of Congress, it continues to exert influence on the Indian people an apprehension that the United States may not in the future honor the unique relationship between the Indian people and the federal government."

"A lingering threat of termination has no place in the administration's policy of self-government for Indian tribes, and I ask congress to again express its support of self-government."

Concerning the effectiveness of the self-government policy Reagan said, "there has been more rhetoric than action. Instead of fostering and encouraging self-government, federal policies have y and large inhibited the political and economic development of the tribes."

"Excessive regulation and self-perpetuating bureaucracy have stifled local decision making, thwarted Indian control of Indian resources, and promoted dependency rather than self-sufficiency. The only effective way for Indian reservations to develop is through tribal governments, which are responsive and accountable to their members."

It was suggested by Leroy Gishie, a Navajo from Holbrook, Ariz., majoring in civil engineering, that Watt should not be the only one to get scrutinized concerning his view of Indians. "Jim Hansen supports Watt."

Gishie was referring to a letter from Rep. James V. Hansen, R-Utah, dated March 9, 1982, to Watt. In the letter, Hansen asks Watt for counsel on the treatment of Indians. He mentions a 1977 bill that would terminate all federal supervision of Indians and Indian tribes and make Indians subject to all the same laws, in the same degree, as are all other American citizens.

Harper said, "The Spanish king made land grants that are still honored by the United States today, so why should Indian land grants be of any less force... no one is lobbying to take the King-Cleberg ranch in Texas from the owners who inherited it, even though the present inheritors are of little relation to the original owners that filed for the homestead."

Clemmer said, "The dominant society pushed Indians onto the reservations." It would be a moral injustice if they were to take them away. "We don't want our culture to become only museum relics."

Lee said, "Some people get up tight about what Indians get from the government, but it is our treaty obligation. The government doesn't take back their treaties from Korea or other nations that they have engaged in war with. Why should they throw away the Indian treaties that came about through war too?"

Hansen's administrative assistant in Washington, D.C., Ted Stewart, said: "We have not tried to violate any of the Indian treaties. We are trying to get the heavy hand out of Indian affairs." The Bureau of Indian Affairs has been too involved in individual reservation decisions, Hansen's spokesman said.

As an example, Indians cannot sell property without the BIA's permission, they also cannot sign oil or gas leases to businesses without the interaction of the BIA, Stewart said.

Hansen and Marriott have met often with the Indian leaders recently, Stewart said. "It has been a real education for all of us."

BYU student, Harper, expressed concern that the BIA is directly overseen by the Secretary of Interior, who is in charge of land and resource management. His office requires no education in social work or the type of problems that now face Indians.

Utah Social Security bill fails

A resolution proposing a solution to the nation's ailing Social Security system that had state senators in mind to send to Washington, D.C., was narrowly defeated by a House Thursday.

The resolution suggested that the Social Security programs be removed from the Social Security system or that employees in the nation be required to contribute to those welfare programs of Social Security. It was defeated 36-5 as legislators watch the vote tally shift and forth before a resolution went down.

Although the resolution was voted down, it is not to be dead according to Sen. LeRoy McAllister, R-Orem, who originally sponsored the bill. The Orem senator said he has and the bill may be re-introduced.

Several spoke in opposition to the resolution, claiming it is unfair to demand federal employees to participate in a program that is failing.

"Why pick on federal employees to bail out this system?" Rep. John Skousen, R-Utah, said. He described the proposal as unfair and unrealistic.

Rep. Ervin Skousen, R-Salt Lake City, proposed an amendment that would delete entirely the suggestion that federal employees be required to pay into the system, emphasizing the aspect of removing the welfare portions of the Social Security system.

McAllister said his resolution was misunderstood by the representatives. He explained that the intent of his resolution was to suggest to the U.S. government that the social welfare portions of Social Security be removed. If that is not done, he said, then the resolution asked that all participate in the funding of the social programs.

"As long as they are social programs," McAllister said, "everybody ought to pay for them."

McAllister also said his resolution has been opposed by many federal employees, because they think it would have them give up their present retirement programs.

Cougars, Utes clash, renew hoop rivalry

By DOUG WILKS
Asst. Sports Editor

It's time for round one of the bi-annual "our-team-is-better-than-your-team" competition as interstate rivals BYU and Utah square off in Salt Lake City Saturday.

The Cougars take a WAC-leading 6-1 record into the Special Events Center where they will face an improved Ute team which, along with BYU, finds itself in the thick of the conference championship race.

The Cougars are coming off a strong performance against New Mexico, and Coach Frank Arnold expects the Cougars to continue playing well.

The kids are aware of the task at hand and know what they have to do," he said.

Forward Brett Applegate said, "If we beat them on the road, the pressure will be on the other WAC teams."

The Cougars will be facing the fourth top scorer in the WAC in Utah's Pace Mannion, but Arnold said BYU will not be doing anything special to stop the senior forward.

"We're concentrating on Utah, not on Mannion. It's five against five out there, not one on one," Arnold said.

The Cougars will go with their normal starting line-up with Scott Sinek and Marty Perry at the guard positions, Greg Kite at center and Devin Durrant and Applegate at the forward spots.

Durrant continues to lead the WAC in scoring with a scoring average of 23.2 points per game.

Against New Mexico, freshman guards Brian Taylor and Chris Nikchevich were used extensively in the second half, but Arnold said he cannot predict who will do most of the playing on Saturday.

"We can't predetermine what we are going to do. We substitute if a guy needs a rest or if it will help the team. We don't substitute to satisfy a man or his parents or even the press."

Arnold said he plays the best five guys for any given situation and added that he expects the Utes to start out running and then slow the game down if they get a lead.

The Utes will probably use a man-to-man defense to try and throw BYU out of its offensive pattern, according to Arnold.

The Cougars will counter with their usual zone defense and play their normal game.

Utah Coach Jerry Pimm said "Our defense has been improving, and our board play was very good this past week. We allowed only five offensive rebounds against UTEP and only two in the second half."

Spikers at home, will face Loyola

BYU's men's volleyball team will attempt some more surprises, said Cougar standouts Brad Hammer and Doug Langlois, this time against Loyola on Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in the Smith Fieldhouse.

"This is an experimental year, but we're not doing too badly," said Hammer. The Cougars have done better than expected this season, nearly upsetting national-power Pepperdine in their first home game.

Loyola got a look at the Cougars at a tournament on Jan. 29 in Santa Barbara where both teams competed, according to Langlois. "They're a good solid team. They have a good program," he said. "But I think we'll beat them."

Loyola competes in the same league with UCLA and Santa Barbara, so they have a lot of experience, Langlois added.

The Cougar team is a little short on experience. Hammer said he and teammate Jeff Jones are the only returnees. But they're long on enthusiasm, according to Langlois. "We're all good friends, and that makes a big difference on the court."

Crosby Pro-Am: Watson trees ball

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Joe Inman shot a 7-under-par 65 and was staked to sole control of the first-round lead Thursday when Tom Watson ran a fool of a cypress tree in the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

"I was seven under and tied for the lead going to 18, then I knocked it into the top of a tree and it never came down," Watson said after he stuck a shot 60-70 feet up in the branches and leaves of a tree and made double bogey on the 18th hole.

"I waited around for the allotted five minutes, hoping for an instant storm to knock the ball down," Watson said.

But the ball didn't come down and his score went up to 67, five under par and two off the pace.

Fred Couples and Ken Green tied for second with a pair of 66s in the mild weather that produced scarcely a breath of a breeze, a sharp contrast to the gales that often howl in from Carmel Bay.

Watson, a two-time winner of this event who also captured the U.S. Open at Pebble Beach last year, was tied with Dr. Gil Morgan, the non-practicing optometrist who won the first two events of the 1983 season. Morgan, like Watson, played his first round at Cypress Point.

Couples also was at Cypress Point. Green played Spyglass, generally regarded as the most difficult of the three courses, while Inman finished off his 65 at Pebble Beach with a 30 on his back nine.

The format calls for the 168 pros, each with an amateur partner, to play one round on each of three rain-soaked Monterey Peninsula courses before the field is cut for Sunday's final round at Pebble Beach.

Top competition on tap for skiers

The BYU ski team, fresh off a victory over last year's National Champions, will take to the slopes of Sundance Ski Resort today and Saturday to compete in a field of 14 teams, including four of the teams that placed in the Top Ten in last year's NCSA national championships.

Western States College, the current national champion, College of Idaho, and Colorado College, both of which placed in the top five in last year's nationals, are among the teams competing in the BYU invitational meet.

The four coaches of these four top finishing teams feel the teams are improved over last year, and are anxiously awaiting the chance to meet each other to see how they will stack up against each other.

Troy McEneaney and Leah O'Brien, last year's men's and women's National Slalom Champions, along with Heidi Hoffman, who placed second in the combined events at last year's championships, are the all-Americans competing for BYU.

Western States College will be paced by Steve Servick and Kathy Presby, who are also all-Americans.

Other teams from Utah participating include Utah State, Weber State and Southern Utah State.

The Giant Slalom will begin at 10 a.m. today with the women's first run. The slalom will begin at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday.

The winner of this meet will have a strong chance at the National Championships during the first weekend of March.

The events are free to spectators.

To win the game, Utah will have to stop the inside play of Kite, who continues to be a dominating force in the middle for BYU.

Along with his rebounding and defense, Kite also shook up the Lobos on Saturday with his shot blocking. The senior center swatted away eight New Mexico shot attempts, a new Marriott Center record.

Both Utah and BYU bring identical 10-10 records into the game which will be televised Saturday at 7:30 p.m. on KUTV.

Soccer meet

The women's soccer team will meet today at 4 p.m. in 225 SFH.

During the fall season, the team compiled a 9-5-1 record against teams in Utah, Arizona and Colorado. For the spring season, the team will hold indoor training sessions twice a week to maintain fitness and work on ball skills. The team will play a light schedule in March and April against local teams.

Coach Carlos Amorim said students who are interested in playing should attend the meeting. Athletes who have not played before are welcome to come try out for the team.

Wrestler heads for classic

Andersen's dream becomes reality

By JOHN DALRYMPLE
Staff Writer

Dreams make up a big part of athletics.

Children often aspire to be professional athletes or compete in prestigious tournaments, but in most cases, their hopes are never realized.

For Brad Andersen, BYU's 118-pound wrestler and defending WAC champion, a dream will come true Monday as he travels to Bethlehem, Penn., to compete in the 17th Annual East-West All-Star Classic.

The East-West All-Star Classic is one of the most prestigious wrestling tournaments in the nation. In fact, it is the only all-star wrestling match that the NCAA puts on.

Each year the NCAA executive committee picks three coaches from the west and three from the east, the dividing line is the Mississippi river, and the coaches choose the lineup for the tournament. Two coaches are also chosen to represent the respective teams.

As football goes, this tournament would be comparable to the East-West Shrine Game. For a coach, it's like being named coach of the year, and for a participant it's like playing in the biggest bowl game.

BYU has been involved in this tournament over the years. The Cougars have sent five wrestlers and Coach Fred Davis led the West team in 1973.

Andersen, however, dreamed of wrestling in this tournament long before coming to BYU. Laron Hansen, Andersen's high school coach in Preston, Idaho, first introduced the idea.

"Hansen was a two-time All-American for BYU and he had wrestled in the East-West tournament.

He used to wear a watch he had gotten when he went back there, and I would always ask him about it," Andersen said. "Since then, it has always been my dream."

Andersen didn't expect to go to the tournament this year, and was surprised by the selection.

"I couldn't believe it when the coach came and congratulated me," Andersen said. "I was really excited and honored."

Originally, Oklahoma State's Randy Willingham, the top-ranked wrestler at 118 pounds, was supposed to represent the West. Andersen was chosen as an alternate, but Willingham withdrew, leaving the position vacant. This brought Andersen's dream into reality.

"I'm hoping to go back there and show them we're tough out here, too," Andersen said. "I want to represent BYU the way it should be done."

Winning this match could move Andersen up in the standings. "He is a good solid wrestler and will probably get seeded in the NCAA tournament later this season because of the East-West match," Davis said. "Winning would put him in the top eight in the nation."

Andersen hasn't always been a winner. When he was 14 years old, he felt he had no future in sports. "I thought I would never amount to much in athletics," Andersen said. "I played basketball in seventh and eighth grades, but I could see my size wasn't going to get me very far."

Andersen, however, didn't let size set him back. "I didn't like riding the bench in basketball so I went into wrestling. Ninth grade was my first full year as a wrestler," Andersen said.

Following ninth grade, Andersen began to progress in his new-found sport. He placed third in Idaho as a sophomore wrestler, and then took the state tournament his junior and senior years.

After graduating from high school, Andersen came to BYU. He placed third in the WAC as a freshman, with a record of 26-9, but left on a mission immediately after that year.

"Going on a mission was a tough decision for me," Andersen said. "All the indicators, as far as athletics goes, pointed against the decision."

"I'm really glad I went, and if I had the decision between being an NCAA champion and a mission, I would take the mission," he said.

Upon his return in June 1981, Andersen began training. Last season, he won the WAC as a sophomore.

Women cagers face Utes

BYU women's basketball team will have the chance to avenge an 89-81 victory-season loss to Utah Saturday at 2 p.m. in the Special Events Center. The Utes defeated BYU in the opening round of the Copper Classic Ogden on Jan. 7 and went on to win the championship game over Weber State 66-65.

The Cougars are leading the race for the High Country Athletic Conference championship, however, with a 10-1 record, while Utah is 3-1 in the conference after a 71-79 loss to Colorado State. BYU is 11-5 for the season. The Utes are 14-6 overall.

Cougar trackmen at home, battle ISU, USU, Wyoming

The BYU track team will play host to Idaho State, Utah State, and Wyoming at noon Saturday in the Smith Fieldhouse.

The Cougars will be without the services of their three top distance runners, Andy DiConti, Eli Eyestone and Gary Barton are competing in a L.A. Times Invitational in Los Angeles in an attempt to qualify for the NCAA Indoor Finals. The distance runners are competing in California to take advantage of the lower elevation and stiffer competition.

BYU will rely on high jumper Dave Stapleton to spark a Cougar victory. Stapleton qualified for the NCAA Indoor meet last Saturday by jumping 7-3. Stapleton is a BYU's co-holder of the high jump record (7-4).

BYU Coach Clarence Johnson said the meet will be a chance for the Cougars to eye-up some of the competition in the intermountain area. "We look at Idaho State as being our toughest competition, because they come more of an indoor team," Robison said. The Cougars can expect shot putter Stephan Fernholm to score points on Saturday. Fernholm, who competed for the first time in two years in the Minidome, won his event with a "cautious" throw of 55'4", according to Robison.

Fernholm was sidelined all of last season with a broken wrist. He must toss the shot 60-2 to qualify for nationals. "He was throwing out of the palm of his hand and not up on top," Robison said. "I think he will qualify the first time we let him go all out."

Saturday's meet prepares BYU for the WAC Indoor Championships to be Feb. 25 and 26 in Albuquerque. Robison said Texas-El Paso would be the team to best despite injuries.

"We would have to have a good day and UTEP would have to have an average day if we were to beat them," Robison said.

Powers said the current team is much better than last season's team. He said one reason is the development of some veterans and the recruiting of some outstanding freshmen.

Y swimmers face Pokes

After destroying nationally ranked Washington on Saturday, BYU men's swimming team has had nearly a week to prepare for tonight's meet against Wyoming. The Cougars will take to the water at 7 p.m. in the Richards Building pool.

BYU is looking to improve its 5-5 dual-meet record, and according to Coach Tim Powers, the Cougars are showing strength. "Everyone is doing very well right now," Powers said. "We are strong in all events from the distances and sprints to diving."

In the last meeting between BYU and Wyoming, the Cowboys went away with an easy victory, 79-34.

Powers said the current team is much better than last season's team. He said one reason is the development of some veterans and the recruiting of some outstanding freshmen.

Gaylor Ravenal, BYU student Robert Wilson, sweeps Magnolia, Laura Wilkinson, off her feet in the Opera West production of the classic musical Showboat. The production, which opened last night, will also performed tonight, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Showboat docks on Provo shore

One of America's first musicals set dock in the Provo Tabernacle as Opera West's production of "Showboat" premiered last night.

The musical takes place in the late 1800's on a Mississippi riverboat which staged melodramas while floating on the river. The humor of the production mixed with sorrow created a well-rounded and colorful show.

The natural setting of the Provo Tabernacle complimented the setting of the musical. The woodwork, railings and balcony gave the appearance of an actual riverboat.

The cast members included the audience as they used the entire space. The center aisle of the tabernacle was used as a boarding ramp to the boat, and the use of the balconies and stairways were used as different deck levels.

The superior vocal qualities and stage presence of the cast was exhibited in their talents.

Outstanding performances were given by Romona Gibbons, who played the role of Queenie, the black cook; Robert Wilson, who acted the role of the gambler, Gaylor Ravenal; and Wilson's real life sweetheart, Laura Wilkinson, who performed as the captain's daughter, Magnolia.

Wilson and Wilkinson were married in the last scene of Act 1 in the play, and were also in love in the melodramas within the play.

Favorite tunes such as "Old Man River" brought a little Southern sunshine to the winter chill of Utah Valley.

Although the chorus, orchestra, and performers did an outstanding job, the poor technical lighting was frustrating to the viewers.

Overall, the show was well-produced and the happy ending was a relief in today's world of tragic endings.

By JANET BALLIF
Staff Writer

Photography is the art of capturing an image of life by stopping a moment in time.

All photography, however, is not the same. George Hampton, BYU Photo Studio manager, and Jim Walker, BYU photo consultant, came from two very distinct areas of photography.

Hampton was a commercial illustrator, specializing in product and studio photography, before he came to BYU in 1967. Walker also came to BYU in 1967; but Walker, who specializes in aerial photography, worked in the technical field for the space program taking photographs and designing special photographic gear.

Hampton and Walker will be exhibiting their works in a photography show called "Thirty Views for 30 Years" in Gallery 308 HFAC through Feb. 28.

"All of my working life has been spent in photography and photography," Hampton said. "It all started in 1937, when I bought my first camera for 50 cents and a cereal box top," Hampton said.

Walker has spent the last 30 years in the technical aspects of photography. "I am at the scientific end of it, and Hampton is at the creative end," Walker said.

Hampton and Walker both brought an eye for image, knowledge of studios and technical background in photography with them to BYU.

Walker and Hampton try to impress upon students the importance of hard work, and not just the glory of photography.

"It is an interesting and exciting career, but the pressure is tremendous," Hampton said.

Both photographers agree that students need a variety of skills for a career in photography.

"You first have to have the technical knowledge and skill," Hampton said. "Then you have to use that knowledge in a creative way. Thirdly, you have to have the psychology of working well with people, and last of all you have to have business sense."

"In this business you can't call your own shots," Walker said. "They're not interested in the pictures you took, but in the picture you are going to take."

Professionalism is important to both Hampton and Walker.

"I believe that to be truly 'professional,' a photographer needs to be versatile in several styles of photography," Hampton said.

"You'll never re-create a moment unless you record it," Walker said.

The photography industry, which is growing, includes the use of computers.

"I am currently working with Apple computers, and electronic programming equipment, to produce multi-media slide presentations of up to 24 projects," Hampton said.

"Photography grows like the computer industry. The variety is there and nobody can be an expert in everything," Walker said. "It's not a little industry any more."

The Daily Universe publishes "Flick Flack," a column of movie reviews, being shown in local theaters and on campus. The reviews are written by University staff members who have viewed the films, or from reviews or other sources material. Movies listed in "Flick Flack" are not necessarily endorsed by The Daily Universe.

BATTLE OF THE BULGE (Film Society) — In December, 1944, the Allied armies feel the war in Europe has been won. But behind the Siegfried Line in the fog-shrouded Ardennes Forest, Nazi Col. Hessler prepares a massive attack. From the moment the German Tiger tanks start to roll, this film becomes a smashing, cyclonic account of a ferocious battle.

BEN HUR (G) — Jewish prince Ben Hur is betrayed by his boyhood Roman friend but achieves retribution after suffering many miseries and indignities. This winner of 11 Academy Awards ranges from torturous slave pits to gigantic sea galley battles, a horrifying lepers' colony to the most realistic chariot race ever filmed.

BEST FRIENDS (PG) — Burt Reynolds and Goldie Hawn star as a screenwriting team who, having lived together for three years, warily decide to wed. The movie is about the troubles they have with their relationship. Some profanity and sex.

THE BOAT IS FULL (International Theater) — A powerful story of five Jews and one Nazi deserter fleeing from Germany and technically barred by the immigration laws in "neutral" Switzerland. The six heroic survivors try to pass as a family in a desperate attempt to escape certain death in Hitler's extermination camps. In German and French with English subtitles.

BRIAN'S SONG (Weekend Movie) — This powerful tale of brotherhood is a story about two men out of whose tender friendship springs a sublime optimism for the future of human beings.

THE CHOSEN (PG) — Set in Brooklyn in the 1940s, two Jewish boys of vastly different backgrounds learn about life with each other's help.

THE DARK CRYSTAL (PG) — Creator of the muppets Jim Henson has devised a luxuriantly original fantasy world as dark as the magic crystal totem at its center. Tots of a tender age may be nightmare prone from the movie, which shows a conflict between good and evil creatures.

EL PROFE (International Cinema) — The comedy adventures of Cantinflas as a school teacher in a small Mexican town. In Spanish without subtitles.

E.T. (PG) — The most successful movie ever is also the best film of the year, the story of an extraterrestrial and his experiences on earth. "E.T." is a moving story, superbly done with colorful special effects.

GHANDI (PG) — A tediously prestigious biographical epic about the emergence of Gandhi as a political organizer among the Indian community in South Africa during the Victorian period and his subsequent career as the political and spiritual inspiration behind India's movement for independence from British colonial rule.

KISS ME GOODBYE (PG) — A fantasy about ghostly James Caan returning to earth to hunt his wife (Sally Field) when she decides to remarry. Some profanity and sex.

MAN FROM SNOWY RIVER (PG) — A love story set in an early Australian cattle industry atmosphere. This humorous and exciting story about a boy becoming a man shows a conflict between man and nature, with rugged scenes of the Australian highlands.

PAPILLON (Varsity Theater) — The film version of the sensational best-seller based on the life story of Henri Charrier, the magnificent rebel sentenced to life imprisonment, but who could not be contained within prison walls. Nicknamed Papillon because of the butterfly tattooed on his chest, he is revealed as a self-disciplined leader of men — a loyal friend and ingenious enemy.

SOPHIE'S CHOICE (R) — Meryl Streep stars as a tormented, beautiful Polish-Catholic heroine who is a guilt-ridden survivor of Auschwitz and tries to make her life worthwhile, with Kevin Kline as her mad-man lover.

TIMERIDER (PG) — A time-travel adventure fantasy starring Fred Ward as a champion motorcyclist who is hurled into a frontier Western past while competing in the Baja 1000 and attracts the interest of an outlaw gang.

TOOTSIE (PG) — The story about an unemployed actor who finds stardom when he poses as a woman. This screwball comedy takes our times takes a comic look at the world of daytime soap opera and stars Dustin Hoffman.

VON RYAN'S EXPRESS (Film Society) — A wild adventurous war film that centers on Air Force Col. Ryan who, after being shot down, is put into an Italian POW camp, joining a handful of G.I.s and the remnants of a British regiment. After arriving, Ryan directs a mass escape to the neutral Swiss border by stealing a Nazi train.

THE VERDICT (R) — Paul Newman gives his best performance in 15 years in this tense courtroom drama about a down-and-out lawyer trying to rebuild his life as he enters a controversial medical malpractice case. Some profanity.
